National Park Service unveils in-depth Fort Sumter website

In recent years the number of visitors to Fort Sumter's website has been as great as those who arrive via the ferry boat. To help give these cyber-visitors as good an experience as traditional on-site visitors, Fort Sumter National Monument has developed an in-depth website.

Visitors to the new site can learn more about the park's history, cultural resources, management, and important information for planning a visit, such as directions to Liberty Square and the ferry schedule.

"We wanted to put as much information on the Web as possible," said Fort Sumter National Monument Superintendent John Tucker. "Not only will this help us to reach the thousands of people who might never get a chance to visit the site in person, but will also help visitors who come to Fort Sumter to better plan their trip."

The new website is available at: www.nps.gov/fosu/home.htm
